Plan Implementation

Our Implementation Team will oversee the entire plan transfer process to ensure your objectives are met and disruption is minimized. Plus, our experienced ERISA professionals will guide you through the many plan customizations that can minimize administrative burdens and unlock better employee retirement outcomes.

Our three-phase transition process typically takes eight to 10 weeks, depending on plan complexity.

PHASE 1: DOCUMENT

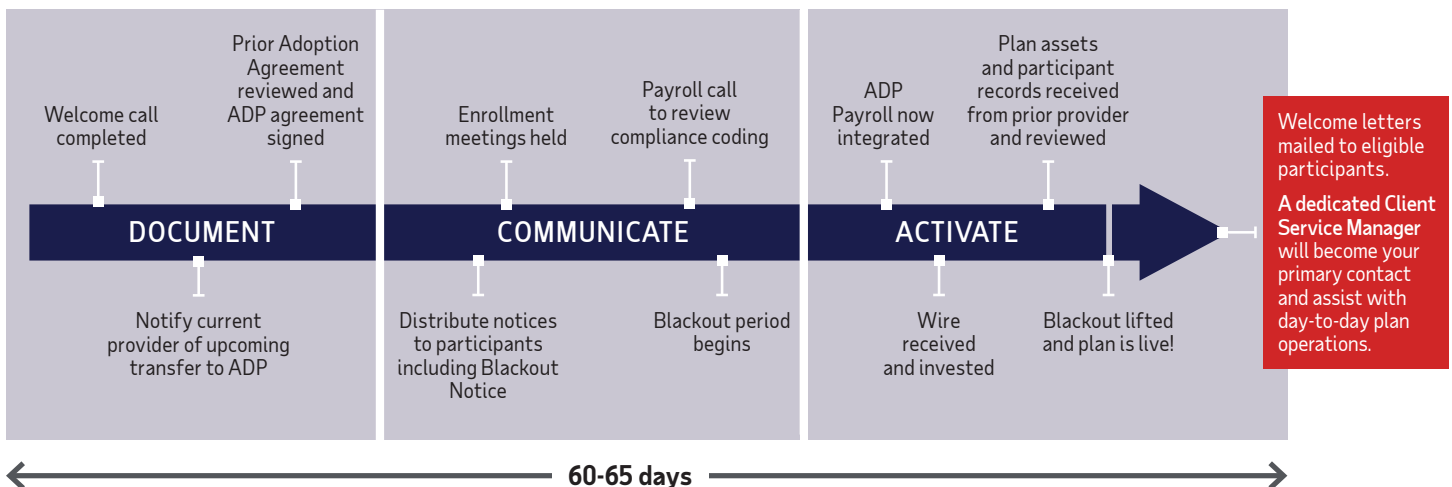

Meet your Implementation Manager, who will review our conversion process, collect critical plan information and provide a template you can use to notify your current plan provider of your service termination.

PHASE 2: COMMUNICATE

As we prepare your plan on our recordkeeping system, we will assist with communicating the plan changes to your employees. An ADP Retirement Counselor will schedule and conduct employee education meetings based on your workforce needs.

PHASE 3: ACTIVATE

The plan trustee will receive your plan assets and ADP will receive your participant-level conversion data. Once the assets and participant records are reconciled, the plan Blackout Period ends, the plan will go live, and full account access will be granted to you and your participants.

The typical implementation cycle will take between 60-65 days from the date all required documentation is received in good order but may vary based on complexity. We will customize an agreed upon timeline based upon your needs and requirements. ADP will handle most of the transition activities, however, you should expect to spend an average of eight to nine hours of your own time during the entire process.
